World champ writes a script with himself in title role

GUYMON, Okla. – Ryan Jarrett could make movies.

On Sunday afternoon during the final performance of the Guymon Pioneer Days Rodeo, the 2005 all-around world champion wrote a pretty nifty script. The last competitor in tie-down roping and in a position to win some pretty good money in the Oklahoma Panhandle, Jarrett roped and tied his calf in 8.1 seconds.

With that, he won the third go-round by half a second and won the aggregate competition by just a little more. Combine that his second-place finish in the second go-round, and the Summerville, Ga., cowboy won nearly $9,200.

“I wasn’t really worried about the round or even trying to win the round,” Jarrett said. “I had to have a heck of a run to win it. I was actually more focused on the average because it pays so well.”

Then, all of the sudden, Jarrett found himself in the spotlight, roping his calf right in front of the chute and getting a quick, yet secure tie on the animal to win the whole shooting match.

For that, he won more than $2,700 for the round; his 26.9 seconds on three runs gave him a .8-second win over the No. 2 man, Sterling Smith of Stephenville, Texas, who had roped just moments before Jarrett.

“My year’s been pretty good,” said Jarrett, whose biggest check came from the average and was worth more than $4,000. “This is the best winter I’ve ever had. But I hadn’t won a whole lot in the last two to three weeks, so this came along at a good time.”

In all, several champions were crowned after seven straight days of competition in the Oklahoma Panhandle’s biggest community, and more than 860 contestants entered the rodeo. The total payout exceeded $314,000.

“This has always been a good rodeo, one you want to win any time,” Jarrett said.
